KANAWHA INSTITUTE FOR SOCIAL RESEARCH AND ACTION RECEIVES $1.5 MILLION FOR RE-ENTRY PROGRAM

CHARLESTON, WV — A program in West Virginia that helps parents' transition from prison to private citizen and reconnect with their children is getting a big boost from the US Department of Health and Human Services (HHS).

The Kanawha Institute for Social Research and Action (KISRA) announced they have received $1.5 million to support their Fatherhood Reentry Program.

Specifically, the funds will help client's transition from incarceration to the community for greater long-term success. It includes helping them reconnect with their children, which strengthens the family as a whole, and decreases the risk factors associated with youth growing up without a father.

Through KISRA's ReFORM Initiative, clients, upon release from incarceration, receive parenting classes, case management services, mentoring, transportation and housing assistance, substance and mental health referrals, transitional job placement and clothing suitable for job interviews and employment.

In addition to classes and learning activities, the funds allow KISRA to provide a supportive environment, employment referrals to KISRA community partners such as Thomas Hospital and others.

For more information on the KISRA Re-FORM Initiative, call 304.768.8924.

Mike Jones has been named the interim KISRA CEO after Reginald Jones announced his resignation in July.

Board member Mike Kelly stated that Mike Jones will serve as an excellent interim CEO given his time at KISRA and his knowledge of the nonprofit.

Mike Jones will serve as interim CEO until a fulltime director can be named.
